Given that ASIC, APRA have known from customers about the scandals for years, it is disingenious for regulators to say "we're shocked".

Everyone is going to the FBI. Submitters to foreign law enforcement warned it that criminals even use the legal ethics board (which has people from APRA and KPMG on it) to search for people who have lawyers help to file "crimestopper reports" with US global regulators. Eg see the concerns that the US Justice International Co-operation Review published.
