In response to commissioner Haynes request for submissions from the public Re interim report on financial institutions

Which has exposed the criminality of our banks and instigation regulating banks with the exposing of the criminality it is urgent that a separation of commercial and investment banks occurs as a glass steagall law would require so that commercial banks would not be involved in insurance, stock broking, superfunds ect.

There is also a urgent need to put in place a national bank along the lines of the original commonwealth bank, a bank that lends to the productive economy not for speculation so as to create stable employment with a living wage in order to develop our country for future generations

For the many not the few
