Your submission:

Dear Commissioner, For the sake of the stability of the nation and the justice and well-being of its people, who are the real economy(!) and who justly deserve their superannuation, please do everything in your power to break up the bank's vertical integration of services by changing its structure. That is a Glass-Steagall model of structural separation for Australia, as the old [REDACTED] had in principle before its deregulation. Already MP Bob Katter has introduced such a bill called Banking system reform (separation of banks) bill 2018 on June 25; so the structural revolution can begin - if it is lawfully debated and duly passed. The sooner the better for the banks, the people, their superannuation and the so-called Everything Bubble. As American economist Lyndon Larouche would say, we have got a better chance of winning the fight for Glass-Steagall than of surviving the crash if we don't! PS. I did agree to have this submission published but the computer program wouldn't allow me to proceed with my submission unless I pressed 'No"! Kind regards, [REDACTED]
