My super money is my own money that I have worked hard for. It does not belong to anybody else but me. Australia needs a Glass-Steagall structural separation of the banking system. Commercial banking and investment banking should be separate so that honest and hard working people are protected if and when the bank's find that their own risky investments and speculation has not come to fruition due to the collapse of the economy. We need to stop the banking sector dictating what our economies are based on and to protect our own assets so that financial slavery can end. Why is it that the banks can make billions of dollars each year, regardless of the economic environment that we all operating within, and then when they collapse due to their own greed, the taxpayer and our super money has to bail them out? Time to put a stop to this legalised thievery and manipulation. The system is rotten to the core and needs to change.
