The criminality has been hidden for long enough! Despite our politicians trying to prevent it, the Royal Commission has brought to light the corruption within the financial industry where those who were meant to prevent it have been complicit in the corruption. The vertical integration of the banks, in particular, has allowed our economy to reach the brink of collapse. Bob Katter has introduced legislation into the parliament to break up the banks, a measure that will prevent this happening, but nothing has been done so far to have it debated, much less see it passed. The Royal Commission is the last chance for the economy to avoid collapse. The senior politicians don't want it even though the nation needs it! Makes you wonder if they might have a vested interest, doesn't it!
