After keeping a close view of the Royal Commission into the banking sector, it is very obvious that the corruption that has been exposed by the commission is nothing less than criminal in it's nature. Many of these perpetrators should be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. As far as I know, stealing money in this country is still a crime and that is what they have done. This country needs a total reform of the banking system and a separation of financial practices that have brought about this demise. A Glass-Steagall separation is the only way that can eliminate these type of criminal banking activities.
